

A World of Difference for a Family

“[Working with SHI] has made such a difference, because through them I have learned how to work the land, how to build a wood-conserving stove, construct a water pump, how to harvest without burning, how to control pests and grow without using chemicals.”

-SHI participating farmer, Manuel Enrique Sanchez

Sustainable Harvest International works with farming communities in Central America. Participant families have saved 30,000 acres of tropical forest from slash-and-burn destruction by converting 6,000 acres to sustainable uses. With organic vegetable gardens, wood conserving stoves, community loan funds and a host of other integrated projects, participants dramatically improve their health and boost family income while protecting the natural environment.
